EDITOR STANDARD:—I consider the Road Steamer Monopoly Bill, now before the Council, very objectionable for various reasons; and amongst which are the following: owing to the natural features of the country through to the natural features of the country through which the road is constructed, it would be imtanes beyond the Thompson river bridge. As for the strength of the bridges I will say nothing, as that is the province of the Government to see to them. There is also a very large aggregate capital in the freighting business, and in connection with it, between victoria and commercial points in the interior of the country, consisting of attamboats, waggons, oxen, horses, mules, blacksmiths and waggon shops for shoeing animals and making and reparing wagons and in cultivating lands for appalling the animals and with the task of conquering the South. All of which is owned by a large unmber of honest industrious citizens, and who have always paid their full quota to the revenue, and expect protection from the gov-ernment for their industry, their pursuits, and their property The projectors of the Thompson Road Steamer monopoly pretend to be very modest in only asking a monoply for Thompsons Patent. Being a reader of British Mechanical Journals, I find that Thompson's Steamers is the only one tha has proved a success on common roads, and that is principally on account of his having patented the India-rubber tires. Hence, is a mere subterfuge to say that other parties will be at liberty to import other patents, as they are all useless for the purpose intended. The projectors ask for power to charge maximum rate of ten cents per pound; where as the average rates for last scason, by teams, did not exceed eight cents -a nice way to benefit the community, encourage miners, &c. The history of monopolies been as much alike as two peas. When you see one, you know what the other will be like. If these parties get the Bill passed, just as soon at they can crush out competition, and that they will soon be able to do, as no man will be found so fool-hardy as to risk himself and property along such dangerous bluffs and precipices when such engines are on the road. Even the innocent camels were a terrible bug-bear to the other animals, and had to be taken off the road. The projectors can easily control the steam-boats, by engag-ing all freight at Victoria and New Westminster, thereby making present steam-boat proprictors their slaves, or readering their pro-perty entirely valueless by putting on steaming business is in their hands, every trader in the upper country will be at their The very large margin that they are allowed, viz: two hundred dollars per ton from Yale to Barkerville, will enable them to crush out
